This data reveals critical information about today's industry leaders, new technologies, and their applications.

The HR tech covered in this summary includes recruitment, employee records, performance, learning and development, compensation management, and compliance tools. The quarterly report features new products that hit the market, as well as funding and acquisition announcements for HR tech companies.

Key Takeaways

- Despite a quarterly decrease, overall venture capital activity has been strong throughout the first half of 2025.
- Within HR, the number of technology announcements, total investment, and average investment increased, especially within workforce management and talent acquisition.
- There were five funding announcements within HR technology that totaled over $100 million. The largest funding round was $450 million for Rippling, a Silicon Valley-based workforce management provider.
- The number of HR technology announcements from the EMEA and APAC regions increased from last quarter, along with interregional joint announcements.

Second Quarter 2025 Venture Capital Activity

Overall, venture capital funding decreased from the first quarter, though the amount of funding is still high year-over-year and continues to outgrow investor expectations. Global funding, fueled by large funding rounds for AI research labs, reached $91 billion in the second quarter of 2025. Nearly half (45%) of global funding went towards AI-based companies.[1]

After a strong showing in the first quarter, funding in North America continues growing with $61.7 million invested. Though this is down from Q1 funding, which totaled over $80 million, the first half of 2025 still had its strongest showing since 2022.[2] Over two-thirds (68%) of US-based VC activity went to California-based companies, mainly to Silicon Valley.[3]

Globally, the number of M&A deals decreased year-over-year, but the value of these deals has increased greatly. This may be caused by persistent economic concerns and the potential impact of tariffs on global deals as companies seem more hesitant to make deals with lower values. The future of M&A activity is dependent on several factors, including interest rates, changing regulations, and private equity activity.[4]

Q2 2025 HR Technology Investments

In the second quarter, HR venture capital (VC) activity grew as total investment in HR technologies reached over $1.5 billion and average investment increased to $46.5 million. After a slowdown in the first quarter, mergers and acquisitions (M&A) activity increased to 34 announcements.

There were 166 major HR technology announcements in the second quarter of 2025, an increase from the 159 announcements in the first quarter but a decrease from the 198 in the second quarter of 2024. Major announcements must include at least $1 million in funding, where funding information was available.

Overall, investors made a comparable number of deals, but for much higher amounts in the second quarter of 2025. Investment in HR technology totaled $1.58 billion, up from the $802.90 million invested in the first quarter and the $946.20 million invested in the second quarter of 2024. The average investment in the second quarter was $46.49 million, over double the $22.94 million in the first quarter and the $24.90 million in the second quarter of 2024. There were five announcements over $100 million. The largest announcement was $450 million for Rippling, a workforce management provider. Without these outliers, the average investment would be $16.82 million.

Overall, investors made a comparable number of deals, but for much higher amounts in the second quarter of 2025. Investment in HR technology totaled $1.58 billion, up from the $802.90 million invested in the first quarter and the $946.20 million invested in the second quarter of 2024.

There were 34 funding announcements, comparable to the 3435 in the first quarter butbut down down from the 40 announcements in the second quarter of 2024. There were also 34 M&A announcements, up from 28 last quarter. Product announcements once again msmade up the majority of announcements with 98 product debuts, up slightly from 96 last quarter but down from 112 in the second quarter of 2024.

As the number of new HR technology products steadily increases, product announcements still account for nearly two-thirds of all announcements. This quarter, products accounted for 59% of announcements, down slightly from 60% last quarter. Until 2023, funding announcements accounted for closer to one-half40% to 50% of all announcements, though this number has steadily declined, hovering around 20% to 25%to closer to one-fifth. This quarter, funding announcements made up just 20% of all announcements, down from 22% last quarter.

Of the 166 technology announcements, 123 were from companies within the United States, 23 from EMEA, 6 from APAC, two from Canada, and one from Latin America. There were 11 interregional joint announcements: 6 from the US and EMEA, 2 from the US and APAC, one from the US and Latin America, one from the US and Canada, and one from APAC and EMEA. Activity in Silicon Valley was robust, with 34 announcements compared to 32 last quarter. Activity in London picked up with 11 announcements compared to three last quarter.

Reflecting the needs of the current labor market, Workforce Management and Talent Acquisition technologies garnered the highest number of announcements and the largest amounts invested. Talent Acquisition, again, had the highest number of announcements, 51, while Workforce Management technologies received the largest amount invested, $623.60 million. Talent Acquisition technologies continue leading growth in investments and product announcements. The influx of investment in Workforce Management mostly stems from the $450 funding round held by a workforce management provider, Rippling.

The first half of 2025 had a strong showing for technology announcements. HR funding seems to be bouncing back from recent declines as product and M&A activity has been steady. Talent acquisition continues leading technology announcements as functions adjacent to employee retention, like engagement, benefits, and wellness, picked up steam this quarter. Activity for the rest of the year will likely continue its upwards growth, depending on economic conditions, the labor market, and needs reflected within the HR sector. ■
