What is Adderall?

Adderall is a combination of two stimulant medications, amphetamine and dextroamphetamine, that work to increase levels of norepinephrine and dopamine in the brain. These neurotransmitters are essential for attention, focus, and impulse control. Adderall is commonly prescribed for individuals with ADHD and narcolepsy. It comes in both immediate-release (IR) and extended-release (XR) forms, with dosages ranging from 5 mg to 30 mg. It is important to use Adderall only as prescribed by a healthcare provider, as it can have side effects if misused.

How Does Adderall Work?

Adderall helps improve concentration and impulse control in people with ADHD by increasing the activity of certain neurotransmitters in the brain. This leads to improved cognitive function and better control over attention. For narcolepsy, Adderall helps to combat excessive daytime sleepiness and promotes wakefulness. However, due to the medication's stimulant nature, it should only be used under medical supervision.
